Where I Am From

By Ally

I am from,
The Mountains
I am from
The blazing sun, that beats down scorching everyone below
I am from
The desert, the burning sands, and the deserts flora and fauna
I am from,
The rock formations livening up the deserts loneliness
I am from
My backyard
My backyard shows me how big the world really is

I am from
My pets and family members, they are my inspiration
They are more than I could ever wish for They let me know I am appreciated
I am from Nature, and my photography my photography brings me more
More love, more laughter, more hugs
My photography brings back memories
Memories of friends and beloved family members and pets
My photography reminds me of all those happy times together,
Times with everyone I love surrounding me

I am from
Strength, my strength is my power,
But I am from hope, destiny, and fate
These last longer than strength
They are more valuable than anything

I am from
Singing and music
Music brings me joy, and i hope brings joy to others as well
But singing brings happiness and smiles to me and those around me
I am from
Muffins and baking, my baking is made from my care for others
It brings me closer to people i love

I am from
My abilities, which stretch farther than i could ever know
I am capable of more that i know and wish to to help others believe that too
My thoughts also stretch far my thoughts lead me back to where i am from
I am from the Earth,
The world, the Earth, the US, Arizona, Phoenix, 44th street, this is my home
And my home will cling to my potential

An Ode to Quarantine

Home all day, and all night

School is cancelled, so is work.

Leaving the house is dangerous unless your essential

Even then, it's dangerous.

Stay inside, stuck with loved ones,

Or go outside, see people, and make it worse for all those staying inside.

2020 is not a good year. One can only hope for a better 2021.

AN ODE TO RED

BY CEYDA

A RED LIGHT ON THE ROAD,
STOP.
RED MARKS ON A PAPER,
WRONG.
RED CHEEKS, BLUSHING,
EMBARRASSMENT.
A BLAZING RED FIRE THAT SWALLOWS THE FOREST, DANGER.

A RED ROSE IN A LUSH GARDEN,
BALANCE.
RED WATERMELON ON A WARM SUMMER DAY,
RESILIENCE.
A CRACKLING RED FIRE, ROASTING S'MORES, A CIRCLE OF LAUGHTER, WARMTH.
A HANDWRITTEN MESSAGE THAT ENDS WITH A HEART, AFFECTION.

RED IS COURAGE, LOVE, AND ANGER.

IT IS STRENGTH, JOY, AND DANGER.

PASSION, WILLPOWER, AND DETERMINATION.

RED REPRESENTS ALL THESE EMOTIONS.

RED IS EMOTION, AND NOBODY IS EVER COMPLETE WITHOUT EVERY SINGLE ONE.

Hanush is from...

I am from Fish, Mice and other animals that live in this world.

I am from the Principia Newton Made. The Monkeys who made me.

I am from the dishwasher and the new technology store the made 400,000,000,000 million years ago.

The people who made me where high tech.

The iPhones and iPads Made me with technology store. Chlorine is my heart which is mixed into water. Water is my blood cells.

I am from the little pieces of the rubik's cube that was made 500,000,000,000,000,000,000,000 Years ago. This is parts of my bones. His is part of my life.

These Pieces make up my life where I am from...

FOR MY ONE AND ONLY PIZZA

Giada

For the food that makes me drool

For the amazing experience it gives me

And a base of sauce

Very bad for you

but worth the calories

The soft and chewy texture of dough

That sits in your belly

The smell of tasty sauce and cheese

That melts your taste buds right off your tongue

For my one and only

Pizza

An Ode

Kendall

To Pink

We tend to assign this color
To a gender
Rather than it just being a color
It is now a description of who you are Girls who like pink are girly-girls
They don't care about anything other than Popularity and looks
And boys who like pink are Weird, gay, feminine
But in my opinion pink isn't a color or a gender
Pink has its own personality
Bubbly, sassy, big
The way it pops
The way it can go to any age
Soft pink
Hot pink
Pastel pink
Maroon
The most diverse color
Yet we still group it with people, genders, and sexualities

If I Ruled the World by Kavya

If I ruled the world, arms would be open and doors would be built
And no longer would tears fall because of injustice
If I ruled the world no longer would you have to raise a fist to fight for equality
If I ruled the world the power would not be with just a few
If I ruled the world hope would never flee
It would be a world without hate and poverty
No one would be lower than others
Systematic oppression would be woven out of the quilt
If I ruled the world it would be a little better
A little more magical and a little more like a story
But I don't rule the world and so maybe one day this will become a reality and world will exist where it holds hands instead of punching with fists

wind whips through the parking lot—the promise of a desert thunderstorm rolling through.

Mom's clothes billow in the wind. She always wears wearing all white and lots of flowy fabric, because of the heat. Normally something about the way her dress flows in the wind makes her look so carefree and carefree. Mom's real good at being positive. All the time. I know her well enough to see that she hasn't been the same over the last few months.

Inside Levine's, Mom and I scour every single rack for a dress that I can wear to primary-school graduation.

Time is such a small treat. My school has a primary, middle, and high school. The primary is from kindergarten to seventh grade, and then we go to secondary school, which is eighth through twelfth grade.

I'm never satisfied. Always when I go to my wardrobe, but always in the junior-end of the juniors department means that I'm always having the reality of being choosy, and that is so much more obvious than when I need dress-up clothes. It's the unfairness of trying to tell fat people not to eat. If I'm lucky, I'll find a dumpy floral dress or two, but I'll never look like wallpaper. . . . I

After endless searching, Mom and I regroup in front of the rack of tank tops with witty sayings on them in
